THE WEBINAR GROWTH SPECIALIST

Datasets VIP · Speaker notes for all 44 slides, with sources on the last page

Slide 1 · Title: The Webinar Growth Specialist

Right, tonight's a big one. I'm going to teach you a skill you can start from zero and get paid properly for.

By the end of this you'll know what a webinar is, what a webinar growth specialist does, how to run a webinar that actually sells, how to find creators who'll pay you, how to get them great results, and how to grow it into a proper business.

You don't need any experience for this. If you've never been on a webinar in your life, that's fine. We start at the very beginning.

One example runs through the whole night so the maths is easy to follow. A creator called Jake. He's got 40,000 followers on Instagram and he teaches people how to edit videos and get paid for it. Jake isn't real. Every number about him is made up to show you how the maths works. When I give you a number from research, I'll give you a range and the source is in the notes and on the last page.

Grab a pen.

Slide 2 · Part One: The Basics

Part one. The basics. If you already know some of this, stick with me, because the way I explain it here is how you'll explain it to creators on sales calls.

Slide 3 · 01 What A Webinar Is

So what's a webinar. It's a free online class that happens live, at a set time. Someone teaches something useful for about an hour, and at the end they offer a way to go further with them, usually a paid course or programme.

Think of it like a free workshop at a local hall, except it's on Zoom, so a few hundred people can join from their sofa.

Three things make it a webinar. It's free to join, so lots of people sign up. It's live at a set time, so people book it in and turn up together. And it ends with an offer, which is where the money comes from.

People sign up with their name, email and phone number, they get reminders, they join, they learn something good, and some of them buy.

That's it. Everything else tonight is just how to do each of those bits really well.

Slide 4 · 02 Why Creators Use Webinars

Why would a creator want this. A lot of creators have the same problem. They've got thousands of followers who like their posts, but hardly any of them buy. Their course sits behind a link in their bio and gets a couple of sales a month.

A post gets a few seconds of attention. A webinar gets an hour. When someone watches Jake teach for an hour, they get to know him, they see he knows his stuff, and they start to trust him. That's when people buy.

It's also one to many. Jake teaches once and two hundred people are in the room. He couldn't have two hundred sales calls in a month if he tried.

And the people there chose to be there. They signed up, put it in their calendar and gave up an evening. Those are the warmest people a creator will ever sell to.

People do stay, too. ON24, one of the big webinar platforms, reports average engagement of roughly 49 to 55 minutes across their webinars in recent years. Their data is mainly business webinars, but it shows people will give you real time if the content's good.

Slide 5 · 03 What A Webinar Growth Specialist Is

So what's a webinar growth specialist. You run the whole webinar for a creator, from getting people to sign up to the sales coming in, and you get paid from the results.

The creator does the bit only they can do. They teach for an hour on the night, and they make the offer at the end.

You do everything else. You write the sign up page, set up the reminders, help write the script and the slides, sort the tech on the night, send the follow up emails, and track the numbers.

Creators love this because they hate the tech and the admin. They want to create content and teach. You take all that off them and hand them back sales.

And you're more than a Zoom tech person, because you're responsible for the result. The word growth is in the title for a reason. If the webinar isn't selling, it's your job to find out why and fix it.

Slide 6 · 04 The Creators You Work With

The creators you want to work with have a few things in common.

They teach a skill people want to learn. Video editing, photography, fitness, music production, design, cooking, languages, copywriting. Anything where people watch their content and think, I want to be able to do that.

They've got an audience. As a rough rule of mine, 10,000 followers or an email list of 1,000 people is enough to fill a first webinar. That's my starting point, not a number from research.

They've got a paid offer, ideally €300 or more, or they could create one. If they sell something for €20, the maths is much harder.

They're busy. They'd rather be filming than building pages and setting up emails.

And people already ask them, how do I learn this properly. If you see that in their comments, that's a creator ready for a webinar.

Jake ticks every box. 40,000 followers, teaches editing, sells an 8 week programme for €1,000, and his comments are full of people asking how to get started.

Slide 7 · 05 How You Get Paid

There are three ways you get paid.

Project fee. You build and run one webinar for a fixed price. Simple and easy to say yes to. For Jake, illustrative number, €3,000.

Monthly retainer. Once it works, you run a webinar every month, improve it and report on it. For Jake, €1,500 a month.

Fee plus a share of sales. A smaller fee up front plus a percentage of what the webinar sells. For Jake, €1,000 to set it up plus 20% of webinar sales. This one suits creators really well, because they like that you only do well when they do well. And if the webinar sells €12,000 in a month, your 20% is €2,400. Every month it runs.

I looked for a standard percentage for this kind of deal and couldn't find a reliable one. Revenue share guides I found give very wide ranges depending on who brings the audience and who does the work. So the 20% is my illustrative number. Agree a number you're both happy with and write it down.

For reference, a 2026 goLance guide puts freelance funnel builders at roughly $20 to $225 an hour. Consulting guides give retainer examples around $4,000 to $7,500 a month (ClickUp, Clicksgeek). A share of sales can beat all of those once the webinar works.

Slide 8 · Part Two: The Webinar Machine

Part two. The webinar machine. How people get from seeing a post to sitting in the room.

Slide 9 · 06 The Whole System On One Page

The whole system fits on one page. Six steps.

Posts and emails. The creator tells their audience about the webinar.

Sign up page. People put their name, email and phone number in.

Reminders. Emails and texts so they actually turn up.

The live webinar. The hour itself.

The offer. What they can buy at the end, with a clear price and a link.

Follow up and replay. Emails for the next week and the recording for people who missed it.

Between those steps are three numbers. How many people who see the page sign up. How many people who sign up turn up. How many people who turn up buy. We call them sign up rate, show rate and buy rate.

When a webinar doesn't make money, one of those three is broken. Your whole job is finding which one and fixing it. Remember that, because we'll come back to it.

Slide 10 · 07 Getting People To Sign Up

Where do the sign ups come from. For a creator, the audience is already there, which is why creators are such a good fit for this.

Posts and reels. Two or three posts in the week before, each one teaching a small tip and pointing at the webinar.

Stories. Every day for a week, with a link sticker. Countdown stickers work well.

Email list. If they have one, it's the best source they've got. Send three emails in the week before.

Link in bio. Point it at the sign up page for the whole week.

Collabs. Another creator in a similar space shares it with their audience, and you can run a joint webinar.

Paid ads come later. Once a webinar is making money, ads let you pour more people in. One 2026 B2B guide estimates Meta cost per webinar sign up at $8 to $12, and WordStream puts the average Facebook cost per lead across industries at $27.66 in 2025. Very different numbers, so you'd test with a small budget first.

For Jake's first webinar, posts, stories, email and the bio link get 500 sign ups, and it costs him nothing.

Slide 11 · 08 The Sign Up Page

The sign up page has one job, getting people to sign up. Everything on it either helps that or gets in the way.

The headline says what they'll get, in their words. For Jake: How to land your first paid editing client in 30 days. That beats Jake's Editing Webinar every time.

Date, time and length at the top, so people can see straight away if they're free.

Three short promises of what they'll learn. Specific stuff, like the first message to send a client.

A photo of the creator and one line of proof. For Jake, his follower count and the fact he edits full time.

A short form. Name, email and phone number for text reminders. Every extra box loses you sign ups.

One button that says what happens, like Save my seat.

And it has to work on a phone, because nearly all the traffic from social media is on a phone. Check it on your own phone before anything goes out.

How many should sign up. A GetResponse study, quoted across several sites, puts webinar sign up pages at about 22.84% on average. ClickMeeting says 35 to 59% depending on how warm the traffic is. A creator's own followers are warm, so you'd hope for the higher end.

Slide 12 · 09 Getting People To Turn Up

This is the step that kills loads of webinars. People sign up, then life happens and they forget.

How many turn up. Goldcast's 2024 report headlines 33%. Univid puts live attendance at 49%. Livestorm reported 47.7% across their 2025 sessions. So plan on roughly 30 to 50% of sign ups turning up live.

A big chunk of people sign up on the day itself. GoTo's 2017 data said about 33%, ON24 in 2017 said 22%, and Livestorm more recently about 15%. So the reminders on the day matter a lot.

The reminders I use. When they sign up, an email and a text with the time and the link. A few days before, an email with something useful. The day before, an email. The morning of, an email and a text. One hour before, an email. Fifteen minutes before, a text. And when you go live, a text and an email saying we're live now.

Texts are powerful because people read them. Companies selling text tools claim big jumps in attendance, but those are their own numbers, so test it yourself. Run one webinar with email only and the next with email and texts, and compare.

Slide 13 · 10 Reminder Messages You Can Copy

These are the actual messages for Jake. Copy the idea and change the details for your creator.

The sign up text confirms it and asks them to save the number, so the next text doesn't look like spam.

The morning email has a subject line that gives them a reason to come. Something specific they'll learn tonight. Then the time and the link.

The fifteen minute text is short and friendly, like a mate texting you. The link has to work in one tap.

Write them how the creator talks. If Jake's a casual lad on Instagram, the texts should sound like Jake, not like a bank.

And test every link on your own phone. One broken link in the last hour can lose you half the room.

Slide 14 · Part Three: The Hour That Sells

Part three. The hour that sells. This is where the money's made, so we'll go through it bit by bit.

Slide 15 · 11 The Hour, Section By Section

A selling webinar is about an hour, in seven parts.

The hook, five minutes. Tell them what they'll walk away with.

The story, five minutes. Who the creator is and why they're worth listening to.

The teaching, about twenty five minutes. Three main points. This is the value.

The bridge, five minutes. Moving from teaching to the offer, smoothly.

The offer, ten minutes. What they get, the price, how to buy.

The close, five minutes. The deadline and a bonus for joining tonight.

Questions, five minutes or more, with the buy link on screen the whole time.

ON24 says the typical webinar on their platform runs about an hour, with average engagement around 49 to 55 minutes. So an hour is a good target. If you can't fill an hour with good stuff, do forty five minutes. Padding loses people right before the offer.

Slide 16 · 12 The First Five Minutes

The first five minutes decide if people stay.

Minute one. Say what they'll get and who it's for. Start on time. Don't wait around for people to join.

Minute two. Give them a reason to stay to the end. For Jake, a free pack of editing presets for everyone who's still there at the end.

Minute three. A quick win. One tip they can use straight away, so they know this is worth their time.

Minute four. Get them typing. Ask them to put in the chat where they're watching from, or how long they've been editing. People who type early stay longer.

Minute five. Tell them the plan for the hour, and say that at the end you'll show them how they can work with Jake. Saying it early means the offer doesn't feel like an ambush.

The opening line on the slide is word for word what I'd give Jake. Three specific things they'll get, all of them things a beginner editor badly wants.

Slide 17 · 13 The Creator's Story

The creator's story is about five minutes and has four parts.

Where they were. For Jake, editing videos for his mates for free and not making a penny.

What went wrong. He spent months learning editing software and still had no clients.

What changed. He stopped learning more software and learned how to find clients and talk to them. He got three paying clients in a month.

Where they are now, with proof. He edits full time, and he's got screenshots of students landing clients.

Use only what's true for your creator. Every creator has a story like this, you just have to ask them the right questions on your kickoff call.

The point of the story is that the people watching see themselves in it. They're where Jake was. The story tells them it's possible, and it sets up what he's about to teach.

Slide 18 · 14 Teaching Without Giving It All Away

This is the bit people get wrong. Teach too little and it feels like an advert. Teach everything and nobody needs to buy.

Simple rule. On the webinar, teach the what and the why. In the offer, sell the how, done step by step with help.

Three main points, and each one should knock down a reason they think it won't work for them.

For Jake. Point one, the three edits clients actually pay for. That knocks down, I'm not good enough yet, because they see it's only three things.

Point two, where clients are hiding in plain sight, like local businesses posting rubbish videos. That knocks down, there's no clients for beginners.

Point three, the first message to send them. That knocks down, I hate selling.

By the end they understand what to do and believe they can do it. What they don't have is the full training, the templates, and someone in their corner. That's exactly what the offer gives them.

Slide 19 · 15 The Bridge To The Offer

The bridge is how you go from teaching to selling without the room going cold.

Three moves. Recap the three points quickly so they feel how much they've learned.

Show the gap. Knowing what to do and doing it are different things. Loads of us know how to get fit, and we still don't do it on our own.

Ask permission. Something like, if you want help doing this, I'll show you how we can work together, pop a yes in the chat. Wait for the yeses before moving on.

The line on the slide is what Jake would say. It's simple, honest, and it leads straight into the offer.

Slide 20 · 16 Presenting The Offer

When you show the offer, make every part easy to understand and easy to put a value on.

Jake's offer is Edit Pro, his 8 week programme, for €1,000.

Each part gets its own line, what it does for them, and a value. The 8 week video course. Weekly live calls with Jake. His editing templates and presets. Scripts for messaging clients. The private community. Add them up and it's €2,000 of value. Then the price, €1,000, said once, clearly.

All those values are illustrative. For a real creator, use honest values, what each part would cost on its own. Made up values wreck trust.

Then a bonus for joining tonight. For Jake, a one to one review of their portfolio, because he can only do so many of them.

And keep the link on screen. Say it out loud. Put it in the chat every few minutes.

Slide 21 · 17 Closing On The Night

The close is the last few minutes before questions.

A real deadline, and you stick to it. If the offer ends Sunday at midnight, it ends Sunday at midnight. Fake deadlines get found out.

A bonus for tonight, something real, like Jake's portfolio review.

Read out people joining, with their permission. Tom from Leeds just joined, welcome Tom. It shows others are going for it. Only if it's real.

Keep the link on screen through all the questions, and repeat the offer two or three times. People join late and decide late.

And listen for the worry behind a question. When someone asks how many hours a week it takes, they're worried they won't have the time. Answer that worry.

Slide 22 · 18 The Worries That Stop People Buying

Four worries come up on nearly every webinar. Have the answers ready.

I can't afford it. For Jake: one editing client at €500 a month pays for it in two months. That's illustrative, but the idea is to compare the price to what the skill earns them.

I don't have time. The lessons are short, twenty minutes a day, and the calls are recorded.

Will this work for me if I'm a complete beginner. Ask them to type their situation in the chat and answer it live. Watching the creator answer real people is one of the best sales tools there is.

I'll do it later. Be straight. Later usually means never, and the bonus ends Sunday.

Same pattern for every one. Agree it's a fair worry, give a straight answer, point to the next step. No pushy stuff. You're helping them decide.

Slide 23 · 19 After The Webinar: Follow Up And Replay

Plenty of sales come in the week after the webinar, so the follow up is part of the job.

Day zero, straight after. The replay and a quick recap of the offer and deadline.

Day one. Answers to the top questions from the night.

Day two. A story about one student who got a result.

Day three. What waiting costs them.

Day five. The replay comes down tomorrow.

Day six. Last day, by email and text.

Day seven. Doors closed, and here's when the next one is.

On the replay. Contrast reports around 42% of webinar views come from replays, and ON24 reports 43% for 2025. So loads of people will only ever watch the recording. Give it the same deadline as the live offer and take it down when you say you will.

Slide 24 · Part Four: Getting Great Results

Part four. Getting your clients great results. This is what makes creators keep paying you and tell their mates about you.

Slide 25 · 20 The Five Numbers You Track

To get results you need to track five numbers on every webinar. One simple sheet.

Cost per sign up. Only matters once you run ads. Ad spend divided by sign ups. GrowthSpree estimates $8 to $12 on Meta for B2B, WordStream puts the average Facebook lead at $27.66.

Test your own.

Sign up rate. Sign ups divided by people who visited the page. Roughly 20 to 40% for a typical page, from GetResponse and ClickMeeting figures, and higher for warm followers.

Show rate. People live divided by sign ups. Roughly 30 to 50% live, from Goldcast, Univid and Livestorm.

Buy rate. Buyers divided by people live. A planning range of roughly 5 to 15% for a selling webinar. ClickMeeting quotes 5 to 20% for teaching webinars, while Focus Digital's figures for some B2B industries sit as low as 1 to 2%, so cheaper or colder offers can be far lower.

Money per person live. Total sales divided by people live. This tells you what one seat is worth, and later it tells you how much you can spend on ads.

The ranges tell you where to look. Your creator's own numbers, webinar after webinar, are what you manage.

Slide 26 · 21 Find The Broken Step

When a webinar doesn't sell, don't guess. Go through the steps and find the number that's furthest off.

Not enough sign ups. Look at the promotion and the page. Post more, use stories every day, rewrite the headline.

Low show rate. Look at the reminders and the time. Add texts, and run it when the audience is free, usually evenings.

Low buy rate. Look at the offer and the pitch. Fix the bridge, the value stack, and the deadline. Also check people are still there when the offer comes. If half have left by minute 35, the teaching is dragging.

Sales in the week after are low. Look at the follow up. Is the sequence actually going out, and is the replay up.

One fix at a time, then run it again. Change four things at once and you'll never know which one worked, so you can't repeat it for the next creator.

Slide 27 · 22 Jake's First Webinar

Let's look at Jake's first webinar. All illustrative.

500 people sign up from his posts, stories, emails and bio link.

100 turn up live. That's a 20% show rate.

6 buy Edit Pro at €1,000. That's a 6% buy rate.

So €6,000 in sales from one evening.

Not bad. But look at the numbers. The buy rate at 6% is inside the 5 to 15% range. The show rate at 20% is well below the 30 to 50% we'd expect. That's the broken step.

And when you look at how it was set up, there was one reminder email and nothing else, and it ran at 2pm on a Tuesday when his followers were at work or in college.

Slide 28 · 23 Fixing One Step

Same Jake, same 500 sign ups. We only fix the turning up step. We add the full reminder sequence with texts, and we move it to 7pm on a Thursday.

The show rate goes from 20% to 40%. Still inside the normal range, nothing crazy.

Now 200 people turn up instead of 100. The buy rate stays at 6%, so 12 sales instead of 6.

Sales go from €6,000 to €12,000.

Same audience. Same offer. One step fixed. Double the money.

That's what a specialist is worth, and it's the slide you'll show creators on sales calls, with their own numbers in it. Keep these numbers in your head, because the pricing slides use them.

Slide 29 · 24 Ten Mistakes That Kill Webinars, 1 To 5

Ten mistakes that kill webinars, and the fix for each. First five.

One. The title is about the creator, like Jake's Live Workshop. Fix it by naming the result the viewer wants.

Two. Promoting it with one story the day before. Promote for a full week, and push hardest in the last two days.

Three. Email only reminders. Add texts for the morning of and fifteen minutes before.

Four. A time that suits the creator. Pick when the audience is free, usually evenings, then test one other slot.

Five. Teaching everything. Three points, the what and the why.

Slide 30 · 25 Ten Mistakes That Kill Webinars, 6 To 10

The other five.

Six. The pitch comes out of nowhere. Use the bridge: recap, show the gap, ask permission.

Seven. A vague offer, like join my programme. Stack each part with what it does and an honest value.

Eight. Fake scarcity, like only three spots left when there's loads. Use a real deadline and stick to it.

Nine. No follow up. Run the seven day sequence and send the replay.

Ten. Not tracking the numbers. Fill in the five numbers after every webinar.

Every one of these is common and every one is cheap to fix. That's exactly why creators will pay you.

Slide 31 · 26 Launch Day Checklist

Go through this before every live webinar.

Every link tested on a phone, from the sign up page to the payment page.

Reminders switched on and tested with your own number and email.

Payment tested with a real purchase, then refunded.

Offer slide checked for the right price and deadline.

A full practice run with the creator on the actual platform two days before.

Sound, camera and internet checked. Wired internet if possible.

Someone in the chat helping people, with the link and answers to common questions ready.

Recording switched on.

A backup link ready to text out if the platform fails.

Follow up emails loaded and scheduled.

Replay page ready with the same deadline.

Tracking sheet ready for the next morning.

Ten minutes on this list saves you from the nightmare of two hundred people and a broken payment link.

Slide 32 · Part Five: Clients And Scale

Part five. Starting, getting clients, and scaling. The how to make money from all of this.

Slide 33 · 27 The Tools You Need

You need one tool for each job. You can learn them all in a few weeks. These are common options, I'm not endorsing any of them.

The webinar room, where the live session runs. Zoom Webinars, Livestorm or WebinarJam.

Sign up pages. GoHighLevel, ClickFunnels, Leadpages or a simple WordPress site.

Emails and texts. ActiveCampaign or GoHighLevel, with a text service plugged in.

Payments. Stripe, or whatever the creator already sells through.

Tracking. Links tagged so you know where each sign up came from, and one sheet with the five numbers.

Slides. Canva or Keynote, and the platform's own recording for the replay.

An all in one tool like GoHighLevel does pages, emails, texts and bookings in one place, which makes life easier when you're starting. Pick one of each, then practise on your own webinar before a creator pays you.

Slide 34 · 28 The Skills, In The Order To Learn Them

The skills, in the order I'd learn them.

One. Webinar numbers. Sign up rate, show rate, buy rate. A weekend with a spreadsheet.

Two. Writing. Sign up pages, emails, texts. This is where the money is won or lost. Write every day.

Three. Webinar scripts. The hour we went through tonight. Write practice scripts for creators you follow.

Four. The tech. Pages, forms, reminders, payment links. Build your own setup from start to finish.

Five. Getting sign ups. Posting, stories, emails, and later a small ad test.

Six. Reading the numbers and fixing. Sign up for loads of creators' webinars and take notes on what they do well and badly.

Seven. Selling your service. DMs, calls, proposals. Last, because you'll sell way better once you can do the other six.

And the best practice of all, run your own webinar. Teach something you know to ten mates on Zoom. You'll learn more in that one hour than in a month of watching videos.

Slide 35 · 29 Finding Creators To Work With

Finding creators is easier than you think. They're all public.

Search Instagram, TikTok and YouTube for the skill. Video editing tutorial, beginner photography tips, home workout plan.

Look for these signs. They post tutorials, so they're already teaching. Their comments are full of people asking how to learn more. They've got a course link in their bio, or nothing at all. They're not running webinars yet. And their followers actually engage, it's not a dead account.

Aim for creators with roughly 10,000 to 200,000 followers. Big enough to fill a webinar, small enough that they still read their DMs. That's my rule of thumb.

Put 100 of them in a sheet. Name, platform, follower count, what they teach, what they sell, and one specific thing you noticed. That one thing is what makes your message work.

Slide 36 · 30 Messages That Get Replies

Two messages. One to creators you don't know, one to people you do.

The cold DM. It's short, it shows you've actually watched their stuff, it points at something real you noticed, and it makes the next step easy. It stays respectful and points at money they're leaving on the table.

The warm message. Tell people you know what you do now, in one line, and ask who they know. People are happy to help if you make it easy.

Numbers. Send 20 a day, that's 100 a week. Track replies and calls in the same sheet. No replies after 100, rewrite the message. Replies but no calls, fix how you follow up.

Change the first line for every single creator. One line that proves you watched their content does more than any template.

Slide 37 · 31 Your First Offer And The Call

Keep your first offer dead simple. I'll build and run one webinar for you, start to finish. You teach for an hour, I do everything else. €1,000 to set it up and 20% of what it sells. If it doesn't make at least €5,000, I'll run the next one for free.

Those numbers are illustrative for Jake. Only offer a guarantee you can afford to keep. Jake's broken webinar still made €6,000, so a €5,000 guarantee is realistic.

On the call, show them five things.

Their numbers on the system diagram. Followers, email list, how many sales they make now.

The gap, worked out with them. Next slide.

What you'd change about how they sell now. Their bio link, their course page, anything you noticed.

A simple plan for the next 30 days.

Proof. Your own practice webinar, a past result, or Jake's example with their numbers. Then ask for the business and stop talking.

Slide 38 · 32 Pricing: Put A Number On The Gap

Price against the gap. Hourly rates put a ceiling on what you earn. Work this out with the creator on the call. All illustrative.

Ask how many sales they make now. Jake sells 2 a month through his bio link. That's €2,000 a month.

Then show what one webinar a month could do, using the fixed numbers from before. 500 sign ups, 200 live, 12 sales, €12,000.

The gap is €10,000 a month. Over a year, that's €120,000 they're leaving on the table.

Now the conversation is about €120,000 a year, and your fee looks tiny next to it. Do the sum with them, using their own numbers, and write it down where they can see it. When they do the maths themselves, they believe it.

Slide 39 · 33 Three Ways To Charge

Now put a price on it, using Jake's fixed webinar making €12,000 a month.

Project fee, €3,000. Paid back by the first three sales on the night.

Retainer, €1,500 a month to run it every month and keep improving it.

Fee plus share, €1,000 to set up plus 20% of webinar sales. At €12,000 a month, that's €2,400 a month to you.

Against a €120,000 a year gap, every option is an easy yes.

With creators, I'd lead with the share option. They love it because you only win when they win, and it's where you make the best money long term. Just make sure every sale is tracked through one checkout so you both see the same numbers, and put the deal in writing.

Slide 40 · 34 Delivering Your First Project

Your first project runs over four weeks.

Week one, kickoff and research. A call to agree the offer, the date and the numbers. Read through their comments and DMs to see what their audience struggles with, in their own words. Those words go straight into the page and the script. And get their story out of them.

Week two, build. The script and slides with the creator, the sign up page, the reminders, the follow up emails, the payment link, the tracking.

Week three, promote. Sign ups open seven to ten days before. Posts, stories every day, emails, bio link.

Week four, launch. A full practice run two days before. Go live. Run the seven day follow up. Then send a one page report with the five numbers and what you'd change next time.

That report is what turns one project into a monthly deal. Show them what happened, what you'd fix, and what it should be worth next month.

Slide 41 · 35 Scaling Your Creator's Results

Once the first webinar works, you grow your creator's results in five ways.

Run it every month. Each one gets better because you're fixing a number each time. And every month is new followers who haven't seen it.

Make an always on version. Take the best recording and set it up so people can sign up and watch it any day of the week, with the same follow up. That's sales coming in between live webinars.

Add paid ads once it makes money. When you know what one person live is worth, you know how much you can pay to get them there. Jake's fixed webinar makes €60 per person live, €12,000 divided by 200. If ads can get people there for less than that, you turn them up.

Add a bigger offer. People who bought the €1,000 programme are the best people to offer a higher level of help to, like a small group mentorship.

Collab webinars. Run a joint webinar with another creator and both audiences come.

All of this is more sales for the creator, and if you're on a share, more money for you.

Slide 42 · 36 Scaling Your Own Business

Growing your own business works the same way, step by step.

Templates. Once you've done one webinar, save everything. The page, the emails, the texts, the script outline, the checklist. Client number two takes half the time.

Stack share deals. Every creator on a share is monthly income. Illustrative maths: three creators each paying you €2,400 a month is €7,200 a month. Five is €12,000 a month.

Get help. Once you've got three clients, pay someone to do the tech setup and keep yourself on the bits that make the money, the script, the offer and the numbers.

Case studies. Every good result, write it up with the numbers and the creator's permission. That's what gets you the next client.

Referrals. Creators know other creators. Ask every happy client who they'd introduce you to.

Stay in one skill area at first, like editing and design creators, so you get known as the person for that.

Slide 43 · 37 Your 30 Day Plan

Your 30 day plan.

Days 1 to 7. Learn the numbers and run your own practice webinar. Teach something you know to ten mates on Zoom, with a sign up page, reminders and a follow up. Rough is fine, as long as it's done. Sign up to five creators' webinars and take notes.

Days 8 to 14. Pick your skill area. Build a list of 100 creators. Write three short teardowns of how they sell now and what you'd change.

Days 15 to 21. Send 20 DMs a day. Follow up with everyone who doesn't reply after three days. Book calls.

Days 22 to 30. Run the calls. Show the gap. Send a simple proposal within 24 hours. Close one creator and start the kickoff.

One client is the goal. One client gets you a result, a result gets you a case study, and a case study gets you the next five.

Slide 44 · 38 Summary

Let's wrap it up.

A webinar is a free live online class that ends with an offer.

A webinar growth specialist runs the whole thing for a creator, and gets paid on the results.

The system is six steps, and three numbers tell you if it's working: sign up rate, show rate and buy rate.

The hour runs in seven parts: hook, story, teaching, bridge, offer, close, questions.

To get great results, track the numbers and fix one step at a time. Jake doubled his sales from €6,000 to €12,000 just by getting more people to turn up.

Price against the gap. Jake's gap was €120,000 a year, so a fee plus 20% is an easy yes.

Then scale. Run it monthly, make an always on version, add ads, and stack more creators.

Your homework. Pick your skill area this week and send your first ten DMs by Friday. Post in the group when it's done, and I'll see you on the next one.

Sources

Figure used	Source	Link
Registration to attendee rate 56% (2023), 57% (2024), 60% (2025), live plus on demand; average engagement roughly 49 to 55 minutes; on demand around 43% of views in 2025; typical webinar about an hour	ON24, Webinar Benchmarks Report key takeaways	https://www.on24.com/blog/key-takeaways-from-the-webinar-benchmarks-report/
Live show up rate 47.7% across 33,786 sessions in 2025; 15.3% register on the event day	Livestorm 2026 Webinar Benchmark Report (as quoted by AEvent and Stealth Agents; primary report not opened)	https://stealthagents.com/research/webinar-registration-attendance-statistics-2026
33% headline attendance rate, calendar 2024, 19,531 B2B webinars	Goldcast B2B Webinar Benchmark Report	https://www.goldcast.io/reports/b2b-webinar-benchmark-report
Live attendance 49%; about 4 in 10 attendees watch the replay	Univid Webinar Insights 2026	https://www.univid.io/webinar-statistics
Webinar sign up pages average about 22.84% (vs 7.12% for all landing pages)	GetResponse study, as quoted by LanderLab and LearnyBox (primary study not opened)	https://landerlab.io/blog/landing-page-conversion-rate
Registration 35 to 59% depending on traffic warmth, 40% plus target on warm traffic; buyer conversion 5 to 20% for teaching led webinars with clear return	ClickMeeting, Webinars That Convert	https://blog.clickmeeting.com/webinars-that-convert
Sales webinars 10 to 20% attendee to action	EasyWebinar, Webinar Analytics 2026	https://easywebinar.com/blog/webinar-analytics/
Attendee to customer around 1.2% for B2B SaaS and marketing agencies, 2.1% oil and gas	Focus Digital, Webinar Conversion Rates by Industry (Dec 2023)	https://focus-digital.co/webinar-conversion-rates-by-industry/
Meta cost per webinar registration roughly $8 to $12 (B2B SaaS, vendor estimate)	GrowthSpree, Meta Ads Webinar Promotion for B2B SaaS 2026	https://www.growthspreeofficial.com/blogs/meta-ads-webinar-promotion-b2b-saas-2026.md
Average Facebook cost per lead $27.66 in 2025, up 21% year on year	WordStream Facebook Ads Benchmarks	https://www.wordstream.com/blog/facebook-ads-benchmarks
33% of registrations on the day of the event; 68% in the final week (350,890 webinars)	GoTo Webinar, 2017 Big Book of Webinar Stats	https://www.gotomeeting.com/webinar/gtw-2017-book-of-webinar-stats
22% register on the day, 37% in the week before	ON24 Webinar Benchmarks Report 2017	https://resources.martechseries.com/whitepapers/ON24_Webinar-Benchmarks-Report-2017.pdf
42% of all webinar views come from on demand replays	Contrast, Webinar Benchmarks	https://blog.getcontrast.io/webinar-benchmarks/
Freelance funnel builders roughly $20 to $225 an hour, mid level around $60	goLance Freelance Rate Guide 2026 (a competing marketplace, so treat as indicative)	https://golance.com/hiring/best-freelance-funnel-builders-hourly-rate
Retainer example: $100 an hour at 40 hours a week gives a $4,000 monthly retainer	ClickUp, How Retainers Work for Consultants	https://clickup.com/blog/consulting-retainer/
Conversion consultant examples at $150 an hour and a $7,500 monthly retainer; hybrid fee plus performance models	Clicksgeek, Conversion Optimisation Consultant Rates	https://clicksgeek.com/conversion-optimization-consultant-rates/

Illustrative, made up to show the maths:

- Jake, the creator, and everything about him: 40,000 followers, video editing, the Edit Pro programme at €1,000, 2 sales a month from his bio link (€2,000 a month), the €120,000 a year gap.
- Worked example: 500 sign ups, 20% then 40% show rate (100 then 200 live), 6% buy rate, 6 then 12 sales, €6,000 then €12,000, €60 per person live.
- Offer stack values (€600, €800, €200, €150, €250, total €2,000) and the portfolio review bonus.
- Fees: €3,000 project, €1,500 a month retainer, €1,000 plus 20% of sales (€2,400 a month at €12,000), the €5,000 guarantee, and 3 or 5 creators at €2,400 each.
- Rules of thumb that are mine, not research: 10,000 followers or 1,000 emails to fill a first webinar, 10,000 to 200,000 follower creators to target, 20 DMs a day.
- Names in example messages and on the night (Jake, Ciara, Tom).

These figures came from web research on 8 November 2026. Several are vendor benchmarks or secondary summaries, and definitions differ (live only versus live plus replay, B2B versus consumer). No published rate card for webinar specialists, and no standard revenue share percentage for running a creator's webinar, was found.