THE WEBINAR GROWTH SPECIALIST

Datasets VIP · Speaker notes for all 40 slides, with sources on the last page

Slide 1 · Title: The Webinar Growth Specialist

Right, tonight is a proper skill session. By the end of this you'll know exactly what a webinar growth specialist does, how a webinar funnel works stage by stage, how to run the webinar itself so it sells, how to read the numbers, and how to land and price your first client.

I'm going to use one example business all the way through so the numbers stay consistent and you can follow the maths. It's a local building firm that does house extensions. Average job is around €30,000 and they keep about 20% of that as gross profit, so roughly €6,000 per job. Every number I give you for that builder is illustrative, meaning I've made it up to show you how the maths works. It's realistic, but it's an example.

Any number I give you from research comes as a range, and the source is named in these notes and in the sources page at the end. Webinar data varies a lot depending on who's measuring and how, so treat the ranges as a starting point and your own client's numbers as the truth.

Grab a pen. There's a lot in this one and every slide is something you can use.

Slide 2 · 01 What A Webinar Growth Specialist Does

A webinar growth specialist builds and runs the whole system that takes a stranger, gets them to sign up for a live webinar, gets them to actually turn up, sells to them on the session and then follows up with the ones who didn't buy on the night.

The key word is whole. A lot of businesses already have pieces of this. They've got a Zoom account, maybe some slides, maybe somebody who runs a few ads. What they don't have is one person who owns the full chain and owns the numbers. That's you.

Think of the builder. Right now the owner is up a ladder all day, misses calls, and quotes people who were never going to buy. You come in and build a monthly evening webinar called something like Planning Your Extension. Homeowners sign up online, get reminders, watch the owner teach for 40 minutes, and book a paid design visit at the end. The owner talks once a month to a room full of people who already trust him, and his diary fills with visits from people who are ready.

You get paid because you can point at the number of visits and jobs that came from the system. That's why the job title has growth in it. Your job is the result.

Slide 3 · 02 Why Webinars Sell

Three reasons webinars sell better than nearly any other way of selling online.

Trust at scale. When someone watches you teach for 40 minutes they get to know how you think, how you talk, whether you know your stuff. That's the trust a salesperson builds over a long call, except you're building it with a hundred people at the same time. For the builder, homeowners are terrified of cowboys. Seeing the owner explain costs honestly for 40 minutes does more than any advert.

One to many. A sales call is one to one. If the owner does 20 home visits to win 2 jobs, that's 20 evenings gone. On a webinar he pitches once to everyone in the room and only the serious ones book a visit.

A buyer who chose to give you an hour. Nobody stumbles into a webinar. They read the page, typed their details in, put it in the calendar and turned up. That's a much warmer person than someone who scrolled past an advert.

And people do stay. ON24's benchmark data puts average engagement on a webinar at roughly 49 to 55 minutes over the last few years. That's from a platform with a huge sample, mainly business webinars, but it tells you people will give you real time if the content is worth it.

Slide 4 · 03 The Money In It

There are three ways specialists get paid and you should know all three before you ever talk to a client.

Project fee. You build and run one webinar from start to finish for a fixed price. Simple to sell, simple to understand, and it's how I'd get your first client. Illustrative number for the builder: €6,000 for the full build, pages, reminders, script, slides, the live run and the follow up.

Monthly retainer. Once the first webinar works, the business wants it running every month. You charge a monthly fee to run it, improve it and report on it. Illustrative: €2,000 a month with a three month minimum.

Fee plus a share of sales. A smaller fee up front plus a percentage of what the webinar brings in. Illustrative: €3,000 set up plus 10% of the gross profit on jobs that came from the webinar. If it books 4 jobs in a month at €6,000 gross profit each, that's €24,000 profit, and your share is €2,400. Only do this when you can track every sale properly and you trust the client to report honestly.

On what the market pays: I couldn't find a reliable published rate card for webinar strategists specifically, so I won't pretend there is one. The closest I found: a 2026 goLance rate guide puts freelance funnel builders at roughly $20 to $225 an hour depending on experience, with mid level around $60. Consulting guides give retainer examples of around $4,000 a month (ClickUp) and $7,500 a month for a conversion consultant (Clicksgeek). Use those as rough reference points. Later in the deck I'll show you how to price against the client's problem, which is how you get well above hourly rates.

Slide 5 · Part One: The Webinar Funnel

Part one. The machine itself. Before you can sell this or run it, you need to see the whole funnel in your head, stage by stage, and know what can go wrong at each one.

Slide 6 · 04 The Full Webinar Funnel

Every webinar funnel has the same seven stages. Learn this picture and you'll understand every webinar you ever look at.

Traffic. People who don't know about the webinar yet. Ads, emails, posts, partners.

Registration page. One page whose only job is to get a name, email and ideally a phone number.

Confirmation and reminders. The messages between sign up and start time. This is where a huge number of webinars quietly fail.

Live session. The hour itself.

Offer. The thing you sell at the end, with a clear price and a clear way to buy.

Follow up. The emails and texts over the next week to people who didn't buy on the night.

Replay. The recording, sent to everyone, available for a limited time.

Between the stages are the numbers that matter. Page visitors to registrants is your registration rate. Registrants to live attendees is your show rate. Attendees to buyers is your buy rate. When a webinar isn't making money, one of those three numbers is broken, or the traffic is costing too much. Your whole job is finding which one and fixing it.

Slide 7 · 05 Traffic: Where Registrants Come From

Registrants come from four places.

Email list. If the business already has a list of past enquiries or customers, start here. It's free and it's warm. For the builder, that's everyone who ever asked for a quote and didn't go ahead. That list alone can fill the first webinar.

Organic content. Posts, short videos, a local Facebook group. Free, but slow, and you can't turn it up when you need more people.

Paid ads. Fast and you can scale it, but it costs money and you need to know your numbers. One 2026 B2B guide from GrowthSpree estimates Meta cost per webinar registration at roughly $8 to $12, and WordStream's 2025 data puts the average Facebook cost per lead across industries at $27.66. Those are very different numbers from different samples, which tells you to test with a small budget and measure your own. In the builder example I use €10 per registrant as an illustrative figure.

Partners. Borrowing someone else's audience. For the builder that might be a kitchen company or an architect who runs a joint webinar and emails their list. Cheap and warm, but you need a good relationship.

How to choose. If the client has a list, use it first. If they have a proven offer and budget, add ads. If they have neither, go to partners and build the list as you go. And whatever you start with, track the cost per registrant from day one.

Slide 8 · 06 The Registration Page

The registration page has one job, and every element on it either helps someone sign up or gets in the way.

The headline names the result they want, in their words. For the builder: Plan your extension without getting ripped off. That beats something like Our Monthly Building Webinar, which is about the business.

Date, time and length right at the top. People want to know if they can make it before they read anything else.

Three short promises. What they'll know by the end. Each one a specific thing, like the three costs builders leave out of quotes.

Who's hosting, with a real photo and one line on why they're worth listening to. Twenty years building extensions in the area, 300 plus completed jobs, that sort of thing. If those aren't true for your client, use what is true.

The form. Name, email, and a mobile number if you're going to use text reminders. Every extra field costs you sign ups, so only ask for what you'll actually use.

One button with an action on it, like Save my seat.

On mobile it all has to load fast and the button has to be visible without scrolling far. Check it on your own phone before any money goes on ads.

Slide 9 · 07 Why Registration Pages Fail

Published figures for webinar registration pages vary a lot. A GetResponse study, quoted across several sources, put webinar landing pages at an average of about 22.84%. ClickMeeting puts registration at 35 to 59% depending on how warm the traffic is, and they suggest aiming for 40% plus on warm traffic. So for a typical page I'd plan on roughly 20 to 40%, lower on cold ads and higher on an email list.

When a page sits below that, it's nearly always one of these.

The headline is about the topic or the business instead of the result. Fix it by writing the result the buyer wants in the words they'd use.

The date and time are hidden. People bounce because they can't see if they're free.

Too many fields. Ask for what you'll use.

Slow on mobile. Your traffic is mostly phones, so test the page on a phone over 4G.

The ad and the page don't match. If the ad says how much does an extension cost and the page says build your dream home, people feel tricked and leave.

It looks like a sales page. If there's a price on it or it's covered in buy now buttons, people think they're being pitched before they've even signed up.

Fix the biggest one, run traffic again, and compare. One change at a time so you know what worked.

Slide 10 · 08 Getting People To Turn Up

This is where I'd look first on nearly any webinar that's struggling. People sign up with good intentions and then life happens.

Timing matters because a big chunk of people sign up late. GoTo's 2017 data found about 33% of registrations happened on the day itself, ON24's 2017 report said 22%, and Livestorm's more recent figures say around 15%. So between roughly 15 and 33% of your registrants might sign up on the day. That means your morning of and last hour reminders do a lot of the work.

For live show rates, Goldcast's 2024 B2B report headlines 33%, Univid puts live attendance at 49% and Livestorm reported 47.7% across their 2025 sessions. ON24 reports 57 to 60%, but that includes people watching on demand. So for live attendance, plan on roughly 30 to 50%.

The sequence I'd use. On sign up, an email and a text confirming the time with the link and a calendar button. If they signed up a few days early, a value email two or three days before, giving them something useful and a reason to turn up. Twenty four hours before, an email. Morning of, email and text. One hour before, email. Fifteen minutes before, a text. And when you go live, a text and an email saying we're live now, with the link.

Text messages matter. Vendors like AEvent and text platforms claim big lifts from adding SMS, but those are their own figures so I won't quote them as fact. Test it yourself. Run one webinar with email only and the next with email plus text, and compare show rates.

Slide 11 · 09 Reminder Messages You Can Copy

These are the actual messages for the builder. Copy the structure and change the details for your client.

The sign up text is short and does two jobs: it confirms the booking and it asks them to save the number so the next text doesn't look like spam.

The morning of email has a subject line that gives them a reason to come, something specific they'll learn tonight. The body tells them when doors open, what to bring, and puts the link front and centre. Asking them to bring something, like their rough budget, makes them more likely to show because now they've got a job to do.

The fifteen minute text is the one that gets people off the sofa. Keep it friendly and casual, like you'd text a mate. The link has to be in it, and it has to work in one tap.

Two practical things. Send reminders in the registrant's own time zone if your platform allows it. And test every link on your own phone before the sequence goes live, because one broken link in the last hour can cost you half the room.

Slide 12 · Part Two: Running The Webinar

Part two. The webinar itself. This is the hour that makes the money, so we'll go through it section by section.

Slide 13 · 10 The Webinar, Section By Section

A sixty minute selling webinar has seven sections. I've given you times but treat them as a guide.

Hook, first five minutes. Tell them what they'll walk away with and why they should stay to the end.

Credibility story, about five minutes. Who you are and why you're worth listening to, told as a short story.

Teaching, around twenty five minutes. Three main points. This is the value, and it's also where you set up the sale.

Bridge, about five minutes. The move from teaching to offer, done so it feels natural.

Offer, ten minutes. What they get, what it costs, how to buy.

Close, five minutes. Deadline, bonus for acting on the night, link on screen.

Questions, five minutes or more. Keep the offer link up the whole time.

On length: ON24 reports that the typical webinar on their platform runs around an hour, with average engagement of roughly 49 to 55 minutes. So an hour is a sensible target. If you can't fill sixty minutes with good material, run forty five. Padding loses people right before the offer, which is the worst time to lose them.

Slide 14 · 11 The Hook And The First Five Minutes

The first five minutes decide whether people stay. I run them minute by minute.

Minute one: say the result and who it's for. No long intro, no waiting for people to arrive. Start on time and start strong.

Minute two: give them a reason to stay to the end. A checklist, a template, a bonus only for people who are live. For the builder it's a one page quote checker they can use on any builder's quote.

Minute three: a quick win. Something useful straight away, so they know this is worth their time. For the builder, the rough cost per square metre for an extension in their area and what changes it.

Minute four: get them typing. Ask them to put in the chat what room they're thinking of extending, or where they're watching from. People who type early stay longer and engage more.

Minute five: the plan for the hour. Three things we'll cover, and a heads up that you'll tell them how to work with you at the end. Saying that early means the offer doesn't come as a shock.

The hook on the slide is the exact opening line I'd give the builder. Every phrase is a specific thing they'll get, and the last bit, before you hand over a deposit, hits the fear every homeowner has.

Slide 15 · 12 The Credibility Story

The credibility story is short, about five minutes, and it has four parts.

Where they were. The situation your buyer is in right now, which ideally is where you or your client once were.

What went wrong. The mistake or the problem, told honestly.

What changed. The thing you figured out. This should line up with what you're about to teach.

Proof now. Results, numbers, photos, testimonials.

For the builder it might go like this. He started out working for a firm that underquoted every job and then hit customers with extras halfway through. He watched families run out of money with half a kitchen. When he set up on his own he started pricing every job line by line with fixed quotes, and he's now done over 300 extensions in the area. Then you show photos of finished jobs and a couple of short reviews. Again, use what's actually true for your client.

The rule: proof beats bragging. Saying I'm the best builder in the county means nothing. Showing a before and after with the homeowner's review means everything. And keep it about the buyer. The story is there so they think, he gets my situation.

Slide 16 · 13 Teaching That Sells Without Giving Everything Away

This is where people get it wrong in both directions. Some teach so little that the webinar feels like a long advert. Others teach everything and then wonder why nobody needs to buy.

The split I use. Teach the what and the why, and sell the how and the doing. On the webinar you explain what needs to happen and why it matters. The offer is how they get it done, quickly and properly, with help.

Three main points, and each one should clear a reason they think it won't work for them. For the builder:

Point one: what an extension costs per square metre locally, and what pushes that number up or down. This clears I don't know if I can afford it.

Point two: the three costs that get left out of quotes. Things like structural engineer fees, building control and the finish level. This clears builders always rip you off.

Point three: how the process runs from drawings to keys, with real timings. This clears it'll take forever and wreck my life.

By the end they understand what's involved and they believe it's doable. What they don't have is the drawings, the fixed quote, or the confidence to do it alone. That gap is exactly what the offer fills.

Slide 17 · 14 The Bridge To The Offer

The bridge is the moment you move from teaching to selling. Get this right and the offer feels like the next obvious step. Get it wrong and you can feel the room go cold.

Three moves.

Recap what they now know. Quickly run through the three points so they feel how much they've learned.

Show the gap. Knowing what to do and getting it done are different things. Name what's still missing for them.

Ask permission. Something like, if you'd like help with that, I'll show you how we can do it with you. Is that alright, pop a yes in the chat. Then wait for the yeses before you move on. That small yes changes how people listen to the offer.

For the builder the line on the slide is close to word for word. You now know what it should cost and what to watch for. The quickest way to get it right is a fixed price plan for your house. That leads straight into the design visit offer.

Slide 18 · 15 Presenting The Offer And Stacking Value

When you present the offer, every part of it has to be easy to understand and easy to value.

The builder's offer is a paid design and survey visit for €295, taken off the price of the build if they go ahead. On its own that sounds like a cost. Stacked properly it's a no brainer.

Each item gets its own line, a short description of what it gets them, and a value. A measured survey of the house. 3D concept drawings so they can see it before they commit. A fixed price written quote with every line itemised. A planning check so they know what's allowed. Add those up and the total value is €1,550. Then the price, €295, said once, clearly, and then the fact it comes off the build.

All of those values are illustrative. When you do this for a real client, use honest values, what that item would cost on its own from them or from a comparable supplier. Inflated values kill trust fast.

Then a bonus for booking live, something real. For the builder it's a priority slot in their start date calendar, because they genuinely book up months ahead.

And put the link on screen. Leave it there. Say it out loud. Put it in the chat every few minutes.

Slide 19 · 16 Handling The Live Close

The close is the last five minutes before questions. A few rules.

A real deadline, and you keep it. If you say the offer ends Sunday at midnight, it ends Sunday at midnight. Fake deadlines get found out and they kill the next webinar.

A bonus for acting tonight. For the builder, the priority start slot. Make it something that genuinely only makes sense to give to people who decide fast.

Read out people booking, with their permission. Sarah from Ballincollig just booked her visit, thanks Sarah. It shows other people are going for it. Only do it if it's real.

Keep the link on screen through the questions, and repeat the offer at least two or three times as you answer things. People join late, drift off, or only decide halfway through the Q and A.

And answer the questions that are really objections. When someone asks how long does the build take, they're really asking whether this is going to wreck their life for a year. Answer the worry underneath.

Slide 20 · 17 Objections On The Day

Four objections come up on almost every webinar in some form. Have your answer ready before you go live.

I can't afford it. For the builder: the €295 comes off the build, so if you go ahead it costs you nothing extra. And you'll leave the visit with a fixed price, so you'll know exactly where you stand before you spend a penny more.

I need to talk to my partner. Totally fair. Book the visit for a time you're both home, and if after the visit you decide not to go ahead, you keep the drawings and the quote.

Will this work for my house. Tell them to type their situation in the chat and answer it live. Seeing you handle real situations is one of the best sales tools you have.

I'll do it later. Be straight about what waiting costs. For the builder: start dates are booked months ahead, and the priority slot is only for people booking this week.

The pattern for all of them is the same. Agree it's a fair concern, give a straight answer, and point back to the next step. Keep the pressure off. You're helping them decide.

Slide 21 · 18 Follow Up: The 7 Day Sequence And The Replay

Plenty of sales come in the week after the webinar, so the follow up sequence is part of the job.

Day zero, straight after. Replay link plus a short recap of the offer and the deadline.

Day one. Answer the top questions from the Q and A, because if one person asked it, twenty were thinking it.

Day two. A case study. For the builder, one real job: what the family wanted, what it cost, how long it took, before and after photos.

Day three. The cost of waiting. Start dates filling up, prices rising, another summer without the space.

Day five. The replay comes down tomorrow and the offer closes.

Day six. Last day. Email and a text.

Day seven. Doors closed, and here's the date of the next one.

On the replay: Contrast reports around 42% of webinar views come from on demand replays, and ON24 reports 43% for 2025. So a big share of your viewers will only ever see the recording. Give the replay the same deadline as the live offer, take it down when you say you will, and add timestamps so people can skip to the offer if they want.

Slide 22 · Part Three: The Numbers

Part three. The numbers. This is what separates a specialist from someone who just runs webinars. When you can read the numbers, you can fix anything.

Slide 23 · 19 The Five Numbers You Track

Five numbers. Track them for every single webinar in one simple sheet.

Cost per registrant. Ad spend divided by registrants. Benchmarks are all over the place. GrowthSpree estimates $8 to $12 on Meta for B2B, while WordStream puts the average Facebook cost per lead across industries at $27.66. Measure your own.

Registration rate. Registrants divided by page visitors. Plan on roughly 20 to 40% for a typical page, with more on warm traffic. Sources: GetResponse average of about 22.84%, ClickMeeting 35 to 59% depending on traffic.

Show rate. Live attendees divided by registrants. Roughly 30 to 50% live, from Goldcast at 33%, Univid at 49%, and Livestorm at 47.7%.

Buy rate. Buyers divided by live attendees. Planning range of roughly 5 to 15% for a sales webinar. ClickMeeting quotes 5 to 20% for teaching led webinars with a clear return. Focus Digital's industry table shows rates as low as 1 to 2% for B2B overall, so cheap or cold offers can sit far lower.

Revenue per attendee. Total revenue divided by live attendees. This is the number that tells you what a seat is worth, and it's how you decide how much you can afford to spend to get someone there.

The benchmarks are there to tell you where to look. Your client's own numbers, webinar after webinar, are what you actually manage.

Slide 24 · 20 Find The Broken Stage

When a webinar underperforms, don't guess. Go through the stages in order and find the number that's furthest below where it should be.

If cost per registrant is high, look at the ads and targeting. First fix: test new ad angles. Three different hooks, same page, and let the numbers pick.

If registration rate is low, look at the page and the promise. First fix: rewrite the headline on the result, cut fields, check mobile speed.

If show rate is low, look at reminders and timing. First fix: add text messages for the morning of and fifteen minutes before, and check the time slot suits your buyer.

If buy rate is low, look at the offer and the pitch. First fix: the bridge, the stack, and a real deadline. Also check people are staying until the offer. If half the room leaves at minute 35, the problem is the teaching dragging, and it's showing up as a low buy rate.

One fix at a time, then run it again. If you change four things and it works, you've no idea which one did it, and you can't do it again for the next client.

Slide 25 · 21 Worked Example: The Builder, Before

Let's put it together with the builder. Every number here is illustrative.

They spend €2,500 on ads in a month. At €10 per registrant that gets them 250 registrants.

Only 50 turn up live. That's a 20% show rate.

Of those 50, 5 book the €295 design visit. That's a 10% buy rate.

Two of those 5 visits turn into jobs, so 40%.

Two jobs at €30,000 is €60,000 in revenue, and at 20% gross profit that's €12,000.

Now diagnose it. Cost per registrant at €10 is fine. Buy rate at 10% sits inside the 5 to 15% planning range. But 20% show rate is well below the roughly 30 to 50% we'd expect. That's the broken stage, and that's the one you fix first. And when I looked at the setup in this example, reminders were email only and the webinar ran at 1pm on a weekday when homeowners are at work.

Slide 26 · 22 Worked Example: Fixing One Stage

Same builder, same ads, same €2,500, same 250 registrants. The only stage we change is the show up stage. We add text reminders on sign up, the morning of and fifteen minutes before, and we move the webinar from 1pm to 7pm.

In this example the show rate goes from 20% to 40%. That's still inside the range we expect, so it's a realistic target.

Now 100 people turn up instead of 50. Buy rate stays at 10%, so 10 design visits instead of 5. Visit to job stays at 40%, so 4 jobs instead of 2.

Revenue goes from €60,000 to €120,000. Gross profit goes from €12,000 to €24,000.

Same spend. One stage fixed. Double the profit. That's the whole value of a specialist in one slide, and it's the slide you'll end up showing clients on sales calls, with their own numbers in it.

Remember these figures because the pricing slides later use exactly the same numbers. The fixed funnel books 4 jobs a month and makes €24,000 gross profit.

Slide 27 · Part Four: Becoming One

Part four. Becoming one. The tools, the skills, the niche, finding clients, pricing and delivery.

Slide 28 · 23 The Tools And What Each Is For

You need one tool for each job, and you can learn all of them in a few weeks. These are common options and I'm not endorsing any of them. Pick one in each category and get good at it.

The webinar room. Where the live session runs. Zoom Webinars, Livestorm, WebinarJam, and on the bigger corporate end, ON24.

Pages and forms. Your registration and thank you pages. GoHighLevel, ClickFunnels, Leadpages or a WordPress site with a form.

Email and text. The reminder and follow up sequences. ActiveCampaign or GoHighLevel, with a text provider plugged in.

Booking and payments. Calendly for booked calls or visits, Stripe for taking payment.

Tracking. The Meta pixel, Google Analytics, links tagged so you know which source each registrant came from, and one spreadsheet with the five numbers.

Slides and recording. Canva or Keynote for slides, and the platform's own recording for the replay.

Some all in one tools like GoHighLevel cover pages, email, text and booking in one place, which is handy when you're starting out. Whatever you choose, build one complete demo funnel for yourself first so you know every setting before a client is paying you.

Slide 29 · 24 The Skills, In The Order To Learn Them

The skills, in the order I'd learn them. The order matters because each one builds on the last.

One, funnel maths. If you can't work out cost per registrant, show rate and revenue per attendee, you can't sell or improve anything. A weekend with a spreadsheet.

Two, copywriting. Headlines, registration pages, reminder messages, follow up emails. This is where the money is made or lost. Write every day.

Three, webinar scripting. The structure we've just been through. Write scripts for imaginary businesses until it's second nature.

Four, tech and automation. Pages, forms, reminders, links. Build your own demo funnel end to end.

Five, traffic basics. Enough Meta ads to run a small test and read the results. You don't need to be an ads expert, but you need to know when the ads are the problem.

Six, reading numbers and fixing. The diagnosis process. Practise on your own demo funnel and on any public webinar you can register for. Sign up for loads of them and take notes on what they do.

Seven, selling your service. Outreach, sales calls, proposals. Last, because you'll sell far better once you've got the other six.

Slide 30 · 25 Choosing A Niche And Your First Client

Pick a niche, because a specialist for building firms gets hired faster than a general webinar person.

Good niches have these things. A high value sale, ideally €3,000 or more, so one extra customer pays your fee. They already sell by talking to people, through visits, calls or consultations, so a webinar fits how they work. They have leads or budget to get them. Someone in the business can present, or you can train them to. And you understand the customer, which makes everything easier to write.

Examples that fit. Extension and renovation builders, solar and heat pump installers, dental implant clinics, financial advisers and mortgage brokers, B2B software companies, accountants and private training providers.

Your first client. Go for someone you can reach directly. A business you've bought from, someone in your family's network, a firm a friend works at. A warm introduction gets you a meeting in days instead of weeks. And you can do the first one at a lower price in exchange for a case study and a testimonial, as long as you're clear about that up front.

Slide 31 · 26 Outreach Messages That Get Replies

Two messages. One cold, one warm.

The cold message is short and specific. It shows you've looked at their business, names one problem you can see, puts a number on it, and asks for a short chat. For the builder, it's the missed calls. You've rung them twice and got voicemail, or their site has a phone number and nothing else. Keep it respectful and point at the money they're leaving on the table.

The warm message goes to people you know. It tells them what you do now in one line and asks who they know. People are happy to help if it's easy, so make it easy.

Volume matters. If you send 20 well researched messages a day, that's 100 a week. Track replies and calls booked in the same sheet you use for webinar numbers. If you're getting no replies after 100, rewrite the message. If you're getting replies but no calls, fix your follow up.

Personalise the first line every time. One line showing you looked at their actual business does more than any template.

Slide 32 · 27 A Simple Offer And What To Show On The Call

Your first offer should be simple enough to explain in one sentence. I'll build and run one webinar for you, start to finish, for a fixed fee, and if it doesn't book a minimum number of visits I'll run the next one for free. The guarantee takes the risk off them and shows you believe in it. Only offer one you can afford to keep.

The €6,000 fee and the 5 visit guarantee are illustrative for the builder. Notice 5 visits is what the broken funnel in the worked example already did, so it's a guarantee you can realistically hit.

On the call, show five things.

Their numbers on the funnel diagram. Even rough guesses. How many enquiries, how many quotes, how many jobs.

The cost of the problem, worked out with them. We'll do that on the next slide.

A teardown of what they've got now. Their website, their enquiry process, any webinar or event they've run. Two or three things you'd fix.

A simple 30 day plan, so they can see how it'll run.

Proof. Your demo funnel, a past result, or the worked example with their numbers. Then ask for the business and stop talking.

Slide 33 · 28 Pricing: Put A Number On The Problem

Price against the problem. Hourly rates put a ceiling on what you can earn. Work it out with the client, live on the call. All illustrative.

Ask how many calls they miss in a month. The builder says about 20, because he's on site and can't answer.

Ask how many enquiries normally turn into jobs. He says about 1 in 10.

So 20 missed calls is roughly 2 jobs a month that went to someone else.

Two jobs at €30,000 is €60,000 in revenue. At 20% gross profit that's €12,000 a month in lost profit.

Over a year that's €144,000.

Now the conversation is completely different. You're offering to fix a €144,000 a year problem, and €6,000 looks small next to that. Do the maths with them, using their numbers, and write it down where they can see it. When the client does the sum themselves, they believe it.

Slide 34 · 29 Price Against The Problem

Now price it. The value of the fix, from the worked example, is a funnel that books 4 jobs a month and €24,000 gross profit, using the same numbers we've used all the way through.

Option one, project fee: €6,000. That's paid back by the profit on a single job.

Option two, retainer: €2,000 a month, three month minimum, to run the webinar every month and keep improving it.

Option three, fee plus share: €3,000 up front plus 10% of the gross profit on webinar booked jobs. At 4 jobs a month, €24,000 profit, that's €2,400 a month to you.

Against a problem costing €144,000 a year, every one of these is easy to say yes to. That's the point of pricing against the problem.

How I'd present it. Lay out all three on one page. The project fee is the easy start, the retainer is where the long term money is, and the share option is for clients you trust with clean tracking. Let them choose. People like having options, and the middle one often wins.

Slide 35 · 30 Delivering A Client Project

A client project runs over four weeks, from kickoff to the live webinar and follow up.

Week one, kickoff and research. A kickoff call to agree the offer, the date and the numbers you'll track. Talk to three to five of their past customers to hear in their words why they bought and what worried them. Those words go straight into the page and the script.

Week two, build. Script and slides, registration page, thank you page, reminder sequence, follow up sequence, tracking. The client approves the script and offer.

Week three, promote. Registration opens seven to ten days before the date. Email the list, turn the ads on, line up any partner emails.

Week four, launch and follow up. Full dry run two days before on the real platform, with the presenter. Go live. Run the seven day follow up. Then send a one page report with the five numbers and your recommendations for the next one.

The report is what turns a project into a retainer. Show them what happened, what you'd fix, and what that should be worth next month.

Slide 36 · 31 Launch Day Checklist

Run through this before every live webinar. Print it.

Links tested on mobile, all of them, from the registration page through to the payment page.

Reminder sequence switched on and tested with your own number and email.

Offer link and payment tested with a real purchase, then refunded.

Slides final, and the offer slide checked for price and deadline.

Presenter has done a full dry run on the platform.

Audio and camera checked, internet wired if possible, phone on silent.

Chat moderator briefed with the link, the top questions and the objection answers.

Recording switched on.

Backup plan agreed if the platform fails, like a backup link texted to everyone.

Follow up sequence loaded and scheduled.

Replay page ready with the same deadline.

Tracking sheet ready to fill in the next day.

It sounds basic. I've seen a webinar with 300 people lose the lot because the payment link went to a 404 page. Ten minutes on this list saves you.

Slide 37 · 32 Ten Mistakes That Kill Webinars, 1 To 5

Ten mistakes that kill webinars, and the fix for each. First five.

One. The title is about the business, like Monthly Building Q and A. Fix it by naming the result the buyer wants, in their words.

Two. Registration opens the day before. Not enough time to fill the room. Open it seven to ten days out and push hardest in the last 48 hours, since a big share of people sign up late anyway.

Three. Email only reminders. Emails get buried. Add texts for the morning of and fifteen minutes before.

Four. The time suits the business instead of the buyer. The builder ran at 1pm when homeowners were at work. Pick the time your buyer is actually free, then test one other slot.

Five. Teaching everything. If you give away the full how, there's nothing left to buy. Three points, the what and the why.

Slide 38 · 33 Ten Mistakes That Kill Webinars, 6 To 10

The other five.

Six. The pitch comes out of nowhere. The presenter goes from teaching straight into prices. Use the bridge: recap, show the gap, ask permission.

Seven. The offer is vague. Something like we'll help you plan your extension. Fix it by stacking each item with what it gets them and an honest value.

Eight. Fake scarcity. Only three spots left, when everyone knows there are more. Use a real deadline and stick to it.

Nine. No follow up. Half the sales can come in the week after, and plenty of people only watch the replay. Run the seven day sequence and send the replay.

Ten. Not tracking numbers. If you don't know your show rate, you can't fix it. Put the five numbers in one sheet after every webinar.

Every one of these is common, and every one is cheap to fix. That's why a specialist is worth paying.

Slide 39 · 34 Your 30 Day Plan To Land The First Client

Your 30 day plan to land the first client.

Days 1 to 7. Learn the funnel maths and build your own demo webinar funnel. Registration page, reminders, a short webinar on any topic you know, and a follow up. It doesn't need to be perfect. It needs to work end to end, so you've done every step yourself. Sign up for five other webinars and take notes.

Days 8 to 14. Pick your niche. Build a list of 100 businesses in it with names and contact details. Write three teardowns of real businesses' websites or webinars, with what you'd fix and the maths of what it's worth.

Days 15 to 21. Send 20 personalised messages a day, warm and cold. Follow up with everyone who doesn't reply after three days. Book calls.

Days 22 to 30. Run the calls. Show the funnel, do the problem maths with them, send a one page proposal with three options within 24 hours. Close one client and run the kickoff.

One client is the goal for the month. One client gets you a case study, and a case study gets you the next five.

Slide 40 · 35 Summary

Let's wrap it up.

A webinar growth specialist owns the whole system, from traffic to follow up, and gets paid on the result.

The funnel has seven stages and three key rates between them: registration, show and buy. When a webinar isn't working, one of those is broken or traffic costs too much.

The hour itself follows a structure: hook, credibility story, teaching, bridge, offer, close, questions.

Track five numbers on every webinar and fix one stage at a time. In the builder example, fixing only the show rate doubled profit from €12,000 to €24,000 a month on the same spend.

Price against the problem. The builder's missed calls cost around €144,000 a year in profit, which makes a €6,000 fee an easy decision.

Then the 30 day plan. Build your demo, pick your niche, send the messages, close one client.

Your homework: pick your niche this week and send your first ten messages by Friday. Post in the group when you've done it and I'll see you on the next one.

Sources

Figure used	Source	Link
Registration to attendee rate 56% (2023), 57% (2024), 60% (2025), live plus on demand; average engagement roughly 49 to 55 minutes; on demand around 43% of views in 2025; typical webinar about an hour	ON24, Webinar Benchmarks Report key takeaways	https://www.on24.com/blog/key-takeaways-from-the-webinar-benchmarks-report/
Live show up rate 47.7% across 33,786 sessions in 2025; 15.3% register on the event day	Livestorm 2026 Webinar Benchmark Report (as quoted by AEvent and Stealth Agents; primary report not opened)	https://stealthagents.com/research/webinar-registration-attendance-statistics-2026
33% headline attendance rate, calendar 2024, 19,531 B2B webinars	Goldcast B2B Webinar Benchmark Report	https://www.goldcast.io/reports/b2b-webinar-benchmark-report
Live attendance 49%; about 4 in 10 attendees watch the replay	Univid Webinar Insights 2026	https://www.univid.io/webinar-statistics
Webinar landing pages average about 22.84% (vs 7.12% for all landing pages)	GetResponse study, as quoted by LanderLab and LearnyBox (primary study not opened)	https://landerlab.io/blog/landing-page-conversion-rate
Registration 35 to 59% depending on traffic warmth, 40% plus target on warm traffic; buyer conversion 5 to 20% for teaching led webinars with clear return	ClickMeeting, Webinars That Convert	https://blog.clickmeeting.com/webinars-that-convert
Sales webinars 10 to 20% attendee to action	EasyWebinar, Webinar Analytics 2026	https://easywebinar.com/blog/webinar-analytics/
Attendee to customer around 1.2% for B2B SaaS and marketing agencies, 2.1% oil and gas	Focus Digital, Webinar Conversion Rates by Industry (Dec 2023)	https://focus-digital.co/webinar-conversion-rates-by-industry/
Meta cost per webinar registration roughly $8 to $12 (B2B SaaS, vendor estimate)	GrowthSpree, Meta Ads Webinar Promotion for B2B SaaS 2026	https://www.growthspreeofficial.com/blogs/meta-ads-webinar-promotion-b2b-saas-2026.md
Average Facebook cost per lead $27.66 in 2025, up 21% year on year	WordStream Facebook Ads Benchmarks	https://www.wordstream.com/blog/facebook-ads-benchmarks
33% of registrations on the day of the event; 68% in the final week (350,890 webinars)	GoTo Webinar, 2017 Big Book of Webinar Stats	https://www.gotomeeting.com/webinar/gtw-2017-book-of-webinar-stats
22% register on the day, 37% in the week before	ON24 Webinar Benchmarks Report 2017	https://resources.martechseries.com/whitepapers/ON24_Webinar-Benchmarks-Report-2017.pdf
42% of all webinar views come from on demand replays	Contrast, Webinar Benchmarks	https://blog.getcontrast.io/webinar-benchmarks/
Freelance funnel builders roughly $20 to $225 an hour, mid level around $60	goLance Freelance Rate Guide 2026 (a competing marketplace, so treat as indicative)	https://golance.com/hiring/best-freelance-funnel-builders-hourly-rate
Retainer example: $100 an hour at 40 hours a week gives a $4,000 monthly retainer	ClickUp, How Retainers Work for Consultants	https://clickup.com/blog/consulting-retainer/
Conversion consultant examples at $150 an hour and a $7,500 monthly retainer; hybrid fee plus performance models	Clicksgeek, Conversion Optimisation Consultant Rates	https://clicksgeek.com/conversion-optimization-consultant-rates/

Illustrative, made up to show the maths:

- The extension builder and every number attached to it: €30,000 average job, 20% gross profit (€6,000 a job), 20 missed calls a month, 1 in 10 enquiries becoming a job, €144,000 a year lost profit.
- Worked example funnel: €2,500 ad spend, €10 per registrant, 250 registrants, 20% then 40% show rate, 10% buy rate, 40% visit to job rate, €60,000 to €120,000 revenue, €12,000 to €24,000 gross profit.
- Offer stack values (€400, €600, €250, €300, total €1,550) and the €295 design visit.
- Fees: €6,000 project, €2,000 a month retainer, €3,000 plus 10% of gross profit (€2,400 a month at 4 jobs), and the 5 visit guarantee.
- Names in example messages (Declan, Ciara, Sarah) and the 300 plus extensions credential.

These figures came from web research on 8 November 2026. Several are vendor benchmarks or secondary summaries, and definitions differ (live only versus live plus replay, B2B versus consumer). No published rate card for webinar strategists specifically was found.